CURRENT RESEARCH

“Critical Cooperation”

The first part of this book-length project compares the explanatory strength of two contending theories of democratic consolidation by looking at the influence of a country’s socioeconomic factors and institutional structures on its level of democracy. This stage of the analysis is based on data collected for 114 countries from 1951 to 1992. The second part applies game theoretical concepts to a sample of countries to investigate the level of elite cooperation during national crises. Thus, the project tests the relative effects of socioeconomic, institutional, and elite factors on democratic consolidation. (This project was supported in part by NSF Grant SBR-9720593, which funded a Visiting Associate Professorship at the California Institute of Technology and data collection during 1998-99.) Draft manuscript presented at the Cambridge University Press/Seattle Seminar.
